HP study explores the importance of balancing everyday technology convenience with the “real” world.

Parents are worried an imbalance between screen time and real time may impact their child.

Despite our increasingly digital world, people are returning to and appreciating real things.